College of Education at Virginia State University

Petersburg, Virginia, June 28th, 2024

FOR IMMEDIATE RELASE

Virginia State University's College of Education is accepting applications for its "fast track" teachers-in-residence program for those interested in Elementary or Special Education. Dubbed "I Too Teach," this program offers endorsements for a one-year Master of Education (M. Ed) degree.

Designed for students balancing careers with education, the College of Education's Masters of Interdisciplinary Studies (MIS) program offers up to six years to earn a degree, allowing working professionals a chance to go back to school on their own time.

Concentrations Offered:

Public Service Leadership

The concentration in Public Service Leadership is designed for public service professionals who wish to enhance their leadership skills and competence, as well as those pursuing careers in public service agencies. Each course is designed to enhance the understanding of the complex social, political, cultural, and organizational environments and the cultural shifts that affect community relations and public service; provide a critical and analytic awareness of power dynamics and power in in relation to public service, politics, policing and community relations; enhance leadership and management knowledge skills and praxis; and enhance the cultural actualization of public service employees and agencies.

Social Justice & Human Rights Practice

The concentration in Social Justice and Human Rights Practice has been uniquely developed to prepare and enhance public service leaders' abilities to utilize theories of social justice and critical research methodologies to analyze and implement policies related to social justice and human rights issues that arise in public service, governmental, community-based, non-profit, public policy, public health, legal/justice, corporate JEDI, and social work agencies.
